Unauthorised Letter Opens the Attack Mansfield's Amendment

By Spencer Rich

WASHINGTON, June 12 (UPI)—An administration move to attack against its critics today as the Senate took up the $1.7-billion military aid authorization bill by the House of Representatives.

The move was a personal letter from Sen. James E. Buckley Jr. to Sen. Edward Brooke, a Republican from New York, who is planning a series of amendments to the bill. The letter was sent to the Senate on Monday, June 12.

C Program ended at Yale

HAVEN, Conn., June 12 (UPI)—Yale University, which ended the nation's first military training unit in 1970, today ended the military on its campus.

The simple ceremony began with a presentation of a certificate to the university's graduates and degree candidates. The ceremony was presented to four Navy cadets, Army second lieutenants and 10 reserve officers in uniform.

The ceremony was held in the university's main hall. The graduates and degree candidates were seated in the front of the hall. The military officers stood at attention.

Will Shift Squadrons Thailand

WASHINGTON, June 12 (AP)—Defense Department today said that a number of U.S. Marine fighter squadrons will be shifted from Thailand as part of a troop withdrawal.

The move would enable U.S. forces to be able to move to the 49,000-man force in Vietnam, which is being reduced by President Nixon to 16,000 by the end of the year.

SAF Commander Replaced

ENGLAND, June 12 (UPI)—The U.S. Third Air Force in England, which was commanded by Gen. James E. Hill, was replaced today by Gen. John J. Hill.

The move was announced by the U.S. Air Force.

Indochina, including a cessation of bombing and shelling.

The cease-fire agreement, Sen. Mansfield said today, would include arrangements for the release of all U.S. prisoners of war and an accounting for all those missing in action. When the prisoners-of-war is completed, that would signal a complete and final end to all U.S. military involvement in Indochina, Sen. Mansfield said.

Nixon's May 8 Proposals

The President, in his letter to Senate leaders, dated Friday, opposed the Mansfield amendment, saying, "I share with you the desire to withdraw our remaining forces from Indochina in a timely and honorable manner. But congressional amendments which can be misconstrued by our adversaries to be hostile to my peace proposals of May 8 do not serve this objective."

Although there are resemblances between Mr. Nixon's May 8 language and Sen. Mansfield's, they differ sharply in that the President set no specified calendar date for withdrawal. In addition, he made U.S. withdrawal contingent upon release of prisoners and an Indochina cease-fire that included a cessation of U.S. bombing and an anti-Communist pact, not just between the Communists and the United States.

In the view of many critics of the President, this means that (unlike the Mansfield proposal) the United States won't simply stop the bombing and get out when its own prisoners and war are safe, but will insist that North Vietnam agree to stop fighting against South Vietnam and thus guarantee the survival of the present regime in the South.

Senate Armed Services Committee Chairman John Stennis, D. Miss., is believed preparing an amendment to kill the Mansfield language or to revise it to coincide exactly with Mr. Nixon's proposal.

Mr. Nixon's letter also called for approval of the entire $2.25 billion sought by the administration, arguing that the $550 million cut would make it impossible to provide U.S. allies with the military equipment to defend themselves without direct U.S. military operations.

Administration backers intend to offer floor amendments restoring all or most of the cut. At the same time, Senate Minority Leader Hugh Scott, R. Pa., and Sen. John Sparkman, D. Ala., are expected to offer amendments attempting to kill Foreign Relations Committee provisions (1) blocking the recent U.S. base agreements on Bahrain and the Azores unless they are sent to the Senate for approval in treaty form, and (2) requiring Senate approval of all future agreements to establish foreign military bases or station U.S. nuclear weapons overseas.

Other provisions which the administration views as restrictive may be challenged as well. Sen. Sparkman is floor-managing the bill in place of Committee Chairman J. W. Fulbright, D. Ark., who opposes the military assistance program.

Ohio Court Bars Firing of County Election Board

COLUMBUS, Ohio, June 12 (AP)—The Ohio Supreme Court today granted a writ of prohibition to prevent the firing of two Republican members of the Cuyahoga County Board of Elections at Cleveland, center of a controversy since a big voter foul-up in the May 2 Ohio primary.

Ohio Secretary of State Ted W. Brown fired the four-member board.

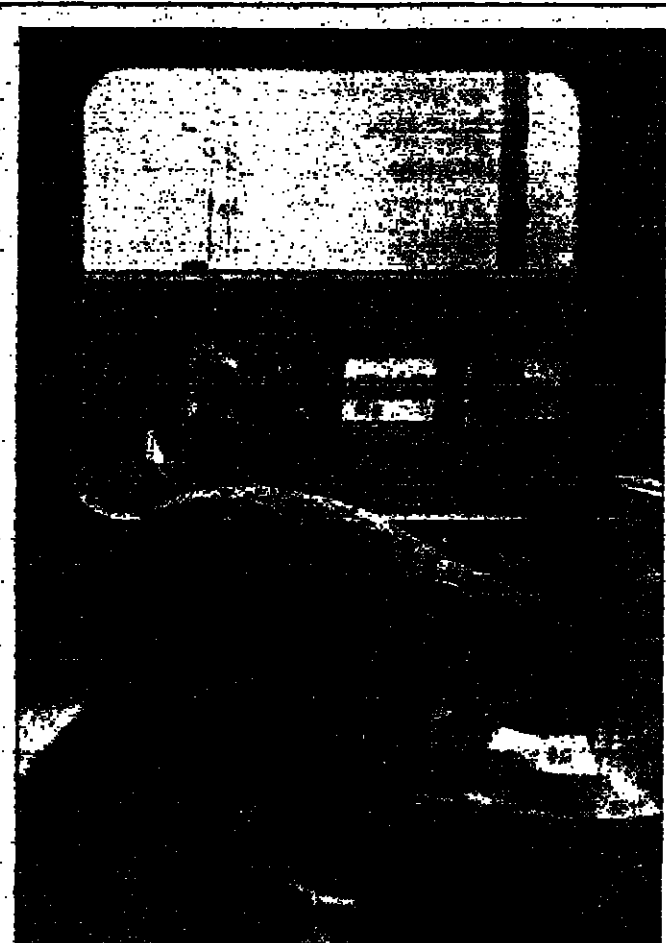

The Republicans asked for the writ, charging their dismissal was illegal, unconstitutional and violated due-process clauses of the Ohio and United States constitutions.

The court set June 19 to hear Mr. Brown's reasons for the action.

Election Day problems included locked polling places, locked voting machines and charges of improper instructions to voters.

Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey got a federal court order on Election Day to extend voting hours from normal 6 p.m. closing to 11:59 p.m.

Sen. George McGovern, D. S.D., won the majority of Cuyahoga County's convention delegation. Statewide, Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey, D. Minn., won 78 delegates to 51 for Sen. McGovern.

'Gideon' Ruling Strengthened

Top Court Orders Counsel For All Risking Jail Terms

WASHINGTON, June 12 (UPI)—The Supreme Court ruled today that a defendant accused of any crime that could lead to a jail term, no matter how short, has the constitutional right to be represented by an attorney.

In a 7-to-2 decision, the high court significantly expanded its landmark "Gideon" rule of 1963, in which it held that any defendant accused of a serious crime has the right to counsel, to be provided by the state if the defendant is too poor to hire his own.

The expansion of the "Gideon" decision was just one of a number of important rulings handed down by the court in an e-rendly busy session. Others included:

- The extension of police power to "stop and frisk" suspects for dangerous weapons.
- A finding that if unrestricted public traffic is permitted on a main road through a military base, the commander of the base may not bar distribution of leaflets along the road.
- Barring creditors from repossessing merchandise without advance notification to the buyer and a hearing before a "neutral official."
- Refusal to deny states the right to issue liquor licenses to private clubs which practice racial discrimination against guests.
- In its expansion of the right to counsel, the court found that "the (Sixth Amendment) requirement of counsel may well be necessary for a fair trial even in a petty-offense prosecution."

Justice William O. Douglas, speaking for the court, held that "we are by no means convinced that legal and constitutional questions involved in a case that actually leads to imprisonment even for a brief period are any less complex than when a person can be sent off for six months or more."

Chief Justice Warren E. Burger, who concurred in the majority opinion, noted that the ruling will change trial practices in many states and place large new burdens on the legal profession, but he expressed confidence that these burdens will be borne successfully.

2 Earthquakes Shake Area West of Tehran

TEHRAN, June 12 (AP)—Tehran University's Geophysics Institute announced that two earthquakes rocked the Kerman-shah region of Iran today about 310 miles west of Tehran.

The quakes—one measuring five on the Richter scale, the other four—struck only a few minutes apart about 5 p.m., the institute reported.

Any earthquake with a reading of 4.5 and up on the Richter scale is considered potentially dangerous. Officials in Tehran had no information on casualties or damage.

McGovern Picks Up 33 Delegates in 2 States But Fails in 3

By Tim O'Brien

WASHINGTON, June 12 (UPI)—Sen. George S. McGovern, D. S.D., added 33 more delegates to his national convention strength during the weekend, showing gains in Virginia and Minnesota. But he lost bids for committed delegates in three other state delegate selection conventions.

As the dust settled at state conventions in Minnesota, Virginia, Oklahoma, Missouri and Kansas, Sen. McGovern emerged with an estimated national tally of 964 1/4 committed delegates.

Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey won seven at-large delegates in Minnesota and four in Virginia, bringing his national strength up to 315 1/2. Alabama's Gov. George C. Wallace, still hospitalized from last month's assassination attempt, won no delegates in the flurry of weekend state conventions. His total remains at 233.

To win the Democratic nomination, a candidate needs 1,509 votes.

Sen. McGovern's best showing came in Virginia, a traditionally moderate to conservative state, where he won 28 new delegates. Only four went to Sen. Humphrey, while Sen. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine and former North Carolina Gov. Terry Sanford won one delegate each. Nineteen of the state's 63 delegates declared themselves uncommitted.

In Minnesota, 13 at-large delegates were selected by the state convention. Seven went to Sen. Humphrey, while six were won by a liberal coalition of Sen. McGovern and Rep. Shibley Chisholm, D. N.Y. Sen. McGovern is expected to get five of the six liberal delegates.

In previous Minnesota district conventions, Sen. Humphrey had won 28 delegates to Sen. McGovern's 14.

Balancing Sen. McGovern's unexpectedly strong showing in Virginia were mild setbacks in Kansas, Missouri and Oklahoma. All the at-large delegates chosen Saturday in the three Midwestern states fell into the uncommitted column, despite Sen. McGovern's attempts to capture a few token delegates.

In Missouri, 18 at-large delegates were chosen, and Sen. McGovern's supporters had asked for seven of them. Missouri party leaders turned down the request, and all 18 delegates selected were formally uncommitted.

However, three of the 18—Sen. Thomas F. Eagleton and Sen. Stuart Symington and Gov. Warren E. Hearnes—are known to back Sen. Muskie's candidacy.

In earlier district conventions in Missouri, 43 additional uncommitted delegates were chosen and Sen. McGovern obtained 12 others.

In Oklahoma, nine uncommitted delegates were chosen Saturday night and in Kansas five were elected. Nationally, the total of uncommitted delegates to the July 9 Democratic convention reached 541 1/4.

The Kansas Democratic convention voted Saturday to send its five at-large delegates to the convention uncommitted. But McGovern campaign leaders indicated that they could swing as many as 30 of the state's 33-member delegation.

McGovern Picks Up 33 Delegates in 2 States But Fails in 3

Other state and district conventions were held during the weekend in Tennessee, North Carolina and California. No changes resulted in first-ballot votes in Miami Beach.

In North Carolina, 11 congressional district conventions picked 48 of the state's 64 delegates to the National Democratic Convention. On the first ballot, state law binds 37 delegates to Gov. Wallace and 27 to former Gov. Sanford.

Six of the delegates chosen Saturday say that they support Sen. McGovern and will vote for him on a second ballot; six others lean toward the South Dakotan. Five support Mr. Sanford and the remainder will not commit themselves.

Although most of Tennessee's delegates are bound by state law to vote for Gov. Wallace on the first two ballots, Sen. McGovern picked up five at-large delegates at Saturday's state convention; he won 15 earlier at district conventions. Four uncommitted delegates were chosen Saturday.

In California, Sen. John Tunney and assembly speaker Bob Moretti, both early supporters of Sen. Muskie's presidential bid, were chosen along with 31 others to round out the McGovern delegation to the national convention.

Inclusion of former Muskie supporters on the California delegation is seen as a step toward carrying other uncommitted and Muskie delegates into the McGovern camp once the convention convenes.

Meanwhile, Sen. McGovern started his campaign for New York's 27 delegates today. And Sen. Humphrey claimed that Sen. McGovern was considering withdrawing from the race as recently as the Wisconsin primary on April 4.

The Democratic national chairman, Lawrence F. O'Brien, said yesterday that former President Lyndon B. Johnson has declined an invitation to attend the convention in Miami Beach July 10-14.

Mr. O'Brien did not cite any reason given by Mr. Johnson. Mr. Johnson did not attend the 1968 convention in Chicago when he was still in office though he had announced he would not run for re-election.

Black Vote Drive Mapped by Nixon Aides

By Paul Delaney

WASHINGTON, June 12 (AP)—Efforts to help President Nixon do better among black voters than in 1968, when he fared poorly, got under way here this weekend with two strategy meetings by black Republicans.

On paper, it was a weekend of political wagers: Mr. Nixon was compared to Jesus Christ, as well as to Winston Churchill, Eleanor and the prophets Isaiah and Amos at one of the sessions. While Sen. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, a longtime foe of the civil-rights movement, was honored at the other meeting.

Further, two Republicans closely identified with the Nixon administration's so-called "Southern strategy"—former Attorney General John N. Mitchell and Harry S. Dent, special counsel to the President—participated in the gatherings. Mr. Mitchell was the main speaker at a $100-a-plate dinner Saturday night.

Sen. Thurmond was among 200 persons cited by the National Council of Afro-Americans, meeting at the Mayflower Hotel. Curtis T. Perkins, executive director of the group, said Sen. Thurmond was being honored for changing the Republican party in South Carolina to allow more black participation and for having a black aide on his staff. About 100 black Republicans attended the affair.

2,000 at Other Meeting

A few blocks away, the Black Vote Division of the Committee for the Re-Election of the President drew about 2,000 blacks to its meeting at the Washington Hilton.

"My director told me to go to Washington, and I told him I'm not a Republican and didn't want to go," remarked an official of a federally funded project in Atlanta. "He said I had to go, that the Republicans would be counting heads and that our program would be up for refunding soon. I asked him what time the next plane left for Washington."

Leaders of the meeting denied there was pressure to force attendance. Stanley J. Scott, assistant director of communications for the executive branch, said, however, that the participants were "beneficiaries of government contracts and should show the administration they care about where their money came from."

The meeting attracted a wide cross section of blacks who are considered successful in their fields, from Jim Brown, the former professional football player, and Betty Shabazz, widow of Muslim leader Malcolm X, to local poverty and housing program officials.

Unaware of Ties

Some of the participants said they were not aware that the event would be partisan and that it had not been advertised as such. Invitations to attend the meeting termed it a "getting ourselves together" event. It was not mentioned as a rally for the President.

The get-together included workshops, closed to the press, on campaign strategy to get more blacks to vote Republican. Mr. Nixon received 12 percent of the black vote in 1968, and black Republicans said they hope to at least double that figure this year.

The comparison of Mr. Nixon to Jesus Christ was made by the Rev. William H. Borders, an Atlanta Republican, who delivered the closing address at the black vote unit's dinner. Mr. Borders said that he would nominate Mr. Nixon as the "statesman of all times" and as a man "whose importance to civilization is almost as Jesus Christ himself."

Half of Britons See EEC Making Them Worse Off

LONDON, June 12 (Reuters).—An opinion poll published in a British newspaper today disclosed that 50 percent of Britons feel they will be worse off for the next 10 years than they are now if Britain joins the European Common Market as scheduled next Jan. 1.

The Harris Poll, reported in The Guardian, was conducted between May 31 and June 4, a time when most prices in Britain were beginning to increase.

Fifty percent of those polled thought that personally they would be worse off than they are now over the next decade if Britain enters; 27 percent felt they would be better off and 23 percent did not know.

Asked how they would feel if Parliament decided Britain should not join the EEC, 48 percent said they would approve, while 35 percent said they would disapprove.

Another 59 percent said they felt the decision to take Britain into the market does not reflect the wishes of the majority of Britons.

The poll was seen as a boost for opposition leader Harold Wilson, who reiterated over the weekend that a Labor party government would renegotiate the terms of entry and hold a referendum on them.

Maker of Reputations, Tastes

Edmund Wilson, Noted U.S. Critic, Is Dead

Wound and the Bow" in 1941 and "Patriotic Gore" in 1952.

He first analyzed the work of Yeats, Eliot, Pound and Joyce in terms of the French symbolist movement.

The second dealt with Victor, Saint-Simon, Thaine, Marx, Engels, Lenin and Trotsky in terms of the revolutionary tradition in Europe. The third concerned the dualism of Dickens, Kipling, Casanova, Edith Wharton, Hemingway and Joyce, and the fourth treated Harriet Beecher Stowe, Lincoln, Grant, Sherman and a number of others who left a record of their experiences leading up to or involving the Civil War.

In other works, the critic paid his respects to many of his contemporaries—Miguel, Steinbeck, Faulkner, Aldous Huxley, Louis Bromfield, Katherine Anne Porter, Thornton Wilder, Malraux and Sartre, among others.

His books of criticism brought Mr. Wilson his renown; a collection of six stories satirizing suburban manners and morals, "Memoirs of Hecate County," earned him notoriety. Published in 1946, the book was banned in New York state as obscene.

Chiefly for one story, "The Princess with the Golden Hair," the story, told in the first person, contrasted the sex life of a suburban matron with that of a city working girl. His love scenes, tame by today's standards, nonetheless shocked the Court of Special Sessions. His ban remains in force, but without effect on the availability of the book to those who search it out.

As a journalist and a novelist, in fact, many of his essays appeared in their first form in such magazines as the New Republic, the New Yorker and New York Review of Books. These he expanded and embellished for his books and this required enormous concentration. He disliked dealing with strangers because of his shyness and his absentmindedness.

A command of culture came naturally to Mr. Wilson, for it was a world into which he was born and in which he was reared. The only child of Edmund and Helen Mather Kimball Wilson, he was born on May 8, 1895, in East Bank, N.J. His father, a successful lawyer, served a term as attorney general of New Jersey. His mother, also of professional background, put store by books and art as household equipment. And, when the boy was 13, his parents took him to Europe for a thorough tour of the cultural sights of Italy, Austria, Germany, France and Britain.

A year later, he was sent to the Hill School in Pottstown, Pa., where his first months were agonizing and rebellious. "My mother, with characteristic lack of tact, had called me 'Bunny' when she brought me on and, at a first get-together in my rooming-house, this was taken up by the boys," Mr. Wilson explained later.

Associate Editor

From 1926 to 1931, Mr. Wilson was associate editor and principal book reviewer for the New Republic. In addition to commenting on the literary scene and introducing, among many others, John Dos Passos as a gifted writer, he wrote "Discordant Encounters," which dealt with the antagonism between man and the machine, and a volume of lyrics and sketches, mostly satiric, "Poets Farewell."

He also published, in 1929, his only novel, "I Thought of Diderot," a book about Greenwich Village. Of his articles for the New Republic, the most political was "An Appeal to Progressives," published in 1931, about a year after the onset of the depression.

In suggesting a radical approach to the country's plight, he invited intellectuals to consider the American Communist party. He found its dogmas narrow but said that radicals "must take Communism away from the Communists, and take it without ambiguities, asserting that their ultimate goal is the ownership by the government of the means of production."

In 1933, Mr. Wilson, then 38, married Mary McCarthy, the 25-year-old book critic for the Nation. He had been married twice previously. His first marriage, to Mary Blair, had ended in divorce; his second wife, Margaret Canby, had died in an accident.

The union with Miss McCarthy, which lasted seven years, tended to be troubled, at least in his wife's recollection. She found him domineering in his views, so that everything that came under his hand was shaped into "an authorized version."

Talent Discovered

She also reported that at one point Mr. Wilson said, "I think you've got a talent for writing short stories." So he put me off in a free room with a typewriter and shut the door.

Mr. Wilson lived for many years with Miss Thornton, his fourth wife, in virtual seclusion in Wellfleet on Cape Cod, in Talloville in upstate New York and in the Caribbean.

He ran into difficulties with the Internal Revenue Service in the 1950s, resulting in a book, "The Cold War and the Income Tax: A Protest." It was published in 1963.

In the years since 1963 Mr. Wilson got into at least two furious quarrels. One was with Vladimir Nabokov over the latter's translation of Pushkin from the Russian. The other was with the Modern Language Association over its scholarly editions of American authors.

Mr. Wilson considered these editions over-pedantic to the point of uselessness.

Generous honors came to Mr. Wilson in the late 1960s. He won the National Medal for Literature in 1966 and, with it, $5,000. The award, he said, was "all the more welcome for being, as I understand it, tax-free, so that not a penny of it will be demanded for the infamous war in Vietnam and for our staggering appropriations in the interest of so-called defense, which, when I last examined the budget in 1964, amounted, together with space programs and the cost of past wars, to 79 percent of the total."

Two years later, he received the Aspen Award for his contributions to the humanities. With it went $50,000, also tax-free.

Soviet Dancer Reported Not Reimprisoned

MOSCOW, June 12 (AP)—A friend of Leningrad dancer Valery Panov, who was dismissed from the Kirov Ballet company after applying to emigrate to Israel, denied today that Mr. Panov had been given a second jail term for "petty hooliganism."

The friend, reached by telephone at Mr. Panov's Leningrad apartment, said the dancer, had completed a 10-day sentence for "petty hooliganism" last Monday and had not been sentenced to another such term.

Western news agencies reported yesterday that Mr. Panov had been given a second term of 15 days. The report was based on Jewish sources who had proved reliable in the past.

Gestapo Auxiliary in Lyons

Pompidou Opens Old Wounds By Pardoning WWII T

By John Vinocur

PARIS, June 12 (AP)—Twice sentenced to death for treason, Paul Touvier, a collaborator who ran the Gestapo's French auxiliary in Lyons, can again walk the streets of his city last night. President Georges Pompidou has pardoned him.

The disclosure last week of the pardon, which was granted quietly last November, opened still wider the unhealed wounds that the Nazi occupation period represents for France. The nation's memories of the period—its preference to recall Resistance feats rather than the passivity of most Frenchmen—have been stirred by recent publication of the memoirs of Klaus Barbie, the Lyons Gestapo boss, who is at large in Bolivia.

Now, the question is posed how Mr. Pompidou can write pressing letters to Bolivia's President Hugo Banzer asking for Barbie's extradition to France, where he has been sentenced in absentia to death, when he has restored Touvier, 57, to the full rights of French citizenship.

You Suffer

Alban Videl, of Lyons, who holds the high distinction of Companion of the Liberation, awarded by Gen. de Gaulle, asked this question about a double standard and then said: "All this Barbie and Touvier business only has the effect of making the Resistance people look like jokers. And when you see that, when you get that thrown in your face, you suffer."

Mr. Pompidou was reported by the news magazine L'Express to have signed Touvier's pardon over unfavorable recommendations by the Justice and Interior Ministries.

Touvier was regional chief at Lyons of the Vichy collaborationist regime's militia which assisted the Gestapo. At the end of the war, Touvier was sentenced in absentia to death and went into hiding.

Protected by Priests

According to L'Express and the newspaper Le Monde, Touvier was protected mainly by priests until the statute of limitations on his death sentence came due in 1967. At that point Magr. Charles Daugre, now attached to the Vatican, began attempts to restore Touvier to full citizenship, which would include living as he saw fit on his return to Lyons and restoring of property and voting rights.

Mr. Pompidou's discreet intervention followed.

Serge Klarfeld, husband of Beate Klarsfeld, the Nazi hunter who led the search for Barbie in South America, said that very few people knew of Touvier's pardon until last week. "Pompidou seemed to think that no one would notice," he said. "No one did until the Barbie case broke. Now, he has completely alienated everyone who is disgusted by Touvier's pardon and has made his position on getting Barbie's extradition indefensible."

Protests over Touvier's pardon have come from the family of Victor Basch, a former head of the League of Human Rights, whom Touvier was accused of murdering and from an anti-Nazi league that it "will in no case condone the pardon."

Nothing Like a Tank to Impress A Girl That You Want to Date

GEORGE HENSEN, Germany, June 12 (AP)—A 19-year-old U.S. Army sergeant, who was spurned by a German waitress here, reinforced his suit with a tank, German police reported today.

Police said after the waitress turned down his request for a date, the sergeant returned to Coleman Barracks in Geinhausen and commandeered a tank at the motor pool. He crashed the tank through a fence and damaged some steps along the road, police said.

On reaching the bar, he reportedly lowered the tank's gun and pointed it at the entrance. An American major and other soldiers succeeded in handing the sergeant out of the tank, turning him over to military police. His name was withheld pending investigation.

The soldier allegedly was under the influence of alcohol, the Army said. But a German police spokesman said "He couldn't have been too drunk or he couldn't have driven a tank through these narrow streets without doing more damage."

By John...
The long strike of the All-Japan Seamen's Union has had effects upon the country's firms as well as on its export industry.

more than 1,000 oceangoing and coastal ships have been tied up in 52 ports across the country, while there are other vessels that have been forced to remain at anchor off ports because of lack of berths.

In the ports, more than 15,000 automobiles, huge volumes of steel, fertilizer, television sets and other export merchandise, in addition to imported petroleum and other domestic cargoes, have been stranded.

The Transportation Ministry said that a direct loss sustained by the shipowners had exceeded $34 million by the end of May.

Marked Increase

The 180,000-member union, made up of five oceangoing and inland seamen groups, has been demanding a marked rise in wages and benefits.

The union has asked for an increase of 75, a 25 percent rise, in monthly wages for oceangoing seamen and 57, or a 28 percent rise, for inland seamen.

In addition, the union has filed a demand for several benefits, including a boost of accident compensation for a seaman killed on duty from the present maximum of $15,000 to $35,000, an increase in family and retirement allowances and pensions and a new system under which family members can see their husbands and fathers at the port of call at company expense.

"We are not in a position financially to accept the union's demand because we have been adversely affected by the current worldwide recession," a spokesman for the shipowners said.

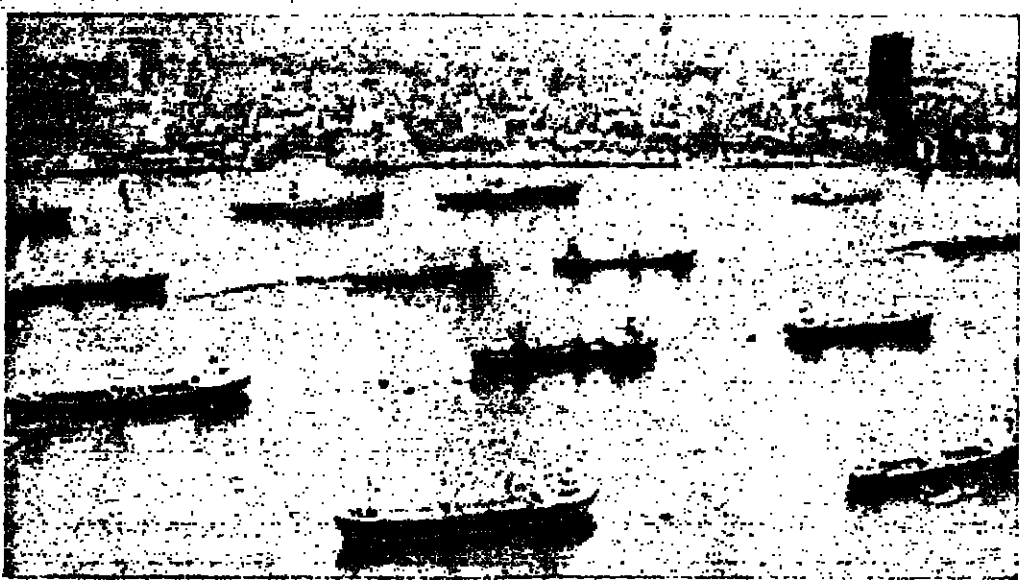

The pay raise of 75 for oceangoing seamen alone will impose an additional heavy financial burden of $89 million upon the shipowners and this will further weaken the competitive power of Japanese shipping in the international market, Rokuro Isouye, an executive of the Shipowners Association, said.

Chances for a settlement of the strike now appear to be slim.

Scribbling in Rome Leads to Jail Term

ROME, June 12 (UPI).—A criminal court today sentenced a self-proclaimed anarchist student to 14 months in jail for scribbling phrases interpreted as expressing pleasure at the murder of a Milan police official.

Police said that Luigi Zanche wrote phrases on restaurant tablecloths praising the murder on May 17 of Police Commissioner Luigi Calabresi in Milan by an unidentified gunman.

Trend Reversed After 40% Rise

EEC Beef Prices Off .5% Since Tariff Cut

PARIS, June 12 (NYT).—The Common Market is experimenting with its tariff scheduled to reduce the price of beef.

In the six days since the 20 percent tariff on beef imports was suspended, wholesale prices in the six EEC countries have fallen by a half a percentage point.

It is not much, but at least the suspension has arrested the catastrophic 40 percent rise that has caused shoppers to growl at their butchers for the last year.

It was the French Agriculture Minister, Michel Colat, who pressed for the EEC action. It marks the first time the community, which has followed the general policy of protecting farmers behind high tariff walls (thereby forcing consumers and food-exporting countries to foot the bill of farm support), has used its tariff schedules to lower prices.

Observers see the move as a sign of the muscle of consumers, which is beginning to show more and more in Europe.

EEC officials reported that the wholesale price of beef has fallen in France, West Germany, Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxembourg—in all member states except Italy. No one in Brussels knows why prices keep going up in Italy. Monopolistic distribution conditions and greed are factors most often cited by observers.

New Negotiator Named by China For Soviet Talks

PEKING, June 12 (UPI).—The Chinese government has appointed Yue Chan, one of the country's five newly named deputy foreign ministers, as chief negotiator for border talks with the Soviet Union.

Yue Chan will succeed Han Nien-jung in the talks which have been going on here since Oct. 20, 1969.

Besides his new appointment, Mr. Yue is also director of the Foreign Ministry's Department of Soviet and Other Socialist Nations. He has long been a member of the border negotiating team.

Despite recent speculation that a "first approach" to the conference table has been reached, sources here say border negotiations have achieved no real results at this point.

Entire Cabinet Resigns in Chile

SANTIAGO, June 12 (UPI).—President Salvador Allende's entire cabinet resigned today to give him a free hand in reorganizing his coalition cabinet, a government statement said.

The resignation came after a series of meetings of the parties which make up the governing Popular Unity coalition, of which the Communists and Socialists are the chief partners.

Political sources said that the two parties were split on Chile's future economic program, with Mr. Allende's Socialists favoring pushing ahead with a Socialist program without compromise and the Communists favoring consolidation first of measures already passed.

Poland 'Regrets' Beating of 2 AP Men by Cubans

WARSAW, June 12 (AP).—U.S. Embassy officials went to Poland's Foreign Ministry today and expressed their concern over the incident in which two Associated Press newsmen were beaten up by Cubans accompanying Premier Fidel Castro.

"We made representations, and the ministry expressed its regret," said an American Embassy spokesman.

The U.S. move follows closely on the heels of similar action taken by the British Embassy—since one of the correspondents is a British national.

Earlier this week four Cubans—identifying themselves as journalists—burst into the Warsaw office of AP, accusing Nicholas Lillitos, a London-born newsmen, of writing "untruths" about Mr. Castro's health. They also beat up George Brodzki, his Polish assistant, fracturing two ribs.

Israel Sets Up Body to Avoid Airline Laxity

Aimed at Enforcing Security Measures

JERUSALEM, June 12 (UPI).—The Israeli government has set up a special security body to follow up on the implementation of security precautions by the 17 overseas airlines serving the Jewish state, Transport Minister Shimon Peres said today.

At a news conference, Mr. Peres said, "We consider the appointment of such a body vital to guard against the possibility that a long lull in hijackings may result in laxity in security precautions."

The body will carry out periodic checks to make sure security precautions are properly carried out," Mr. Peres said, adding that the enforcement of thorough body and luggage searches and examination of identification and travel documents will come up for special attention.

He did not say if airlines would be sanctioned for laxity.

Mr. Peres's remarks coincided with a disclosure that Israeli authorities have completed their interrogation of Kozo Okamoto, sole survivor of the Japanese suicide squad which killed and wounded more than 100 persons at Lydda airport last May 30.

Police said that Okamoto will be tried in public by a military court.

Australia Pilots Strike

MELBOURNE, June 12 (Reuters).—The Australian Federation of Airline Pilots has called on its 2,000 members to strike for 24 hours next Monday as part of an international protest against government kithbazy toward hijacking.

Quintuplets Doing Well in W. Germany

FRANKFURT, June 12 (UPI).—Six-week premature quintuplets born to the German wife of an American radio technician yesterday are "progressing well" in incubators, a hospital spokesman said here today.

The babies, four girls and a boy, were born to Mr. and Mrs. Harry C. Bean, of West Hartford, Conn. They have been married four years, and Mrs. Bean, 31, had received "hormone" injections for apparent sterility. The infants were delivered by caesarian section within a two-minute period by nine doctors. The heaviest, the boy, weighed three pounds twelve ounces; the smallest, two pounds four ounces.

Soviet Police Seize Zionist After His U.S. Bride Leaves

By Theodore Shabad

MOSCOW, June 12 (NYT).—A young Soviet Jew who had sought to avoid military service was detained here today shortly after saying good-bye to a young American woman he married Thursday in a private Orthodox Jewish ceremony.

The husband, Gavriel Y. Shapiro, a Zionist activist, was seized at Moscow airport after his bride, the former Judy Silver, flew out for London en route to New York and her home in Cincinnati.

Although Mr. Shapiro, a 27-year-old chemical engineer, was wanted for evading active duty as a reserve officer, he had emerged from hiding to attend the religious wedding at his parents' home near Moscow University.

A religious ceremony has no legal standing in the Soviet Union, and the couple followed through by applying for a civil marriage license without official interference. The wife left today because her tourist visa expired, but she planned to return for the civil wedding, set for Aug. 30.

The authorities, having evidently kept the young couple under surveillance, did not act until after her departure. A witness outside the airport terminal said Mr. Shapiro, wearing a neatly trimmed beard, had been detained by a uniformed policeman and two plainclothesmen and driven off in a police car.

Mr. Shapiro is one of 14 Soviet Jews who were summoned for military service a month ago after having pressed earlier applications for emigration to Israel.

Some of the 14 were found medically unfit, others heeded the call-up, and still others, including Mr. Shapiro, decided to avoid the summons on the ground that the summons in the Soviet Army would further lessen their chances of obtaining an exit visa.

In a related development, another activist who had been included in the original call-up was detained today when he reported to his draft board to learn why he had been summoned.

The activist, Dan Raginsky, a 33-year-old physicist, had been out of town when the original call-up notices had been sent out, Jewish sources said.

He and Mr. Shapiro are among a growing number of young Jewish scientists and technicians who have been refused emigration on the ground that they had been engaged in secret work. They deny any involvement in secret research, which the Soviet authorities officially consider to cover a vast range of scientific activities, some only remotely associated with national defense.

She Weeps in London
LONDON, June 12 (UPI).—Judy Silver Shapiro broke down in tears tonight when she learned, on landing here, that Soviet police had arrested her husband minutes after he saw her plane off at Moscow.

"I'm in a terrible state now," said Mrs. Shapiro, 27. "I shouldn't have left Moscow... I want to be with my husband."

"I will appeal to President Nixon to help get him back," she said, drying tears that streamed down her face.

Demonstrators in behalf of Soviet Jewry paraded around her at Heathrow Airport. They carried placards denouncing "Fascist Russia."

Stockholm, Pollution and All That

The United Nations Conference on the Human Environment, which is going on in Stockholm, would have been justified if it did no more than dramatize the fragility of the planet and arouse its occupants to the imperatives of international rescue. Unfortunately, perhaps inevitably, it has not performed that essential task. Instead, in the raising of the issue, a major split on it has developed, making it debatable whether Stockholm will be remembered as a pioneering forum of international cooperation or as just another arena of international conflict. We refer, of course, not to the political dispute over East Germany which led the Soviet Union and some East Europeans to stay home, but to the split between the world's developed and developing states.

China's onslaught against the United States exploited the unhappy fact that many poor countries regard the global environmental cause as a rich countries' trick designed to seal them into eternal backwardness. The poor are leery, for instance, that recycling of raw materials will reduce their exports; that they will lose further from restrictions on food or materials from a "sweated environment"; that the cost of pollution controls will raise the price of industrial goods they must buy, and so on. This is the basis of their demands—demands rejected by the American delegation, which was bound by tight instructions reflecting political realities back in Washington—for extra aid to pay for the extra costs of environmental care.

The result is that it has become almost impossible for the conference sponsors to stick to the safe high ground of their earlier intentions: stating vague principles, arranging to monitor global conditions, and setting up an organization at the United Nations to carry on the work.

Whatever the outcome this week, the sound and fury should not be confused with the maximum effort by the world's leading polluters—that is, the world's rich—which the urgency of the problem demands. That the Russians aren't at Stockholm is not too serious; at the summit the United States and the Soviet Union agreed to cooperate on pollution control, although it is not clear whether they have more in mind now than simply swapping technology. What is essential is that, in international approaches to pollution, the United States not confine its efforts to formats so general and political—such as Stockholm—as to assure that practically no real progress will be made.

Specifically, the American obligation is to join with other rich countries—not only fellow Western members of the OECD but the rich socialist countries as well—and to stop particular kinds of pollution. Environmental poisoning in agriculture is tough to tackle: To cut off DDT, of which the United States is the chief producer, for example, would cause a sharp rise in malaria and a decline in farm productivity in many developing countries. Similarly, the poisoning resulting from human waste seems to be of the sort that will and can be tackled only when local communities act.

Industrial pollution is something else. The rich do it, and the rich can do something about it. One interesting approach, first outlined in Foreign Affairs by Charles C. Humpstone and subsequently elaborated and endorsed in a resolution by 33 senators, would be to have rich countries set emission standards by industry and to enact tax and tariff schedules as financial incentives to reduce emissions to zero over a certain term of years. Such a scheme would remove business competition as a reason for not spending what is necessary to halt the foulest industrial emissions.

All nations have an equal interest in the planet's welfare and survival but some nations are more equal—that is, more responsible for pollution and more capable of cleanup—than others. The tension between rich and poor so evident at Stockholm cannot be allowed to keep the rich from doing what they must do by themselves.

THE WASHINGTON POST.

The Pilots' Warning

The threat of the international organization representing airline pilots to shut down global service for 24 hours on June 19 unless the United Nations acts to stop hijacking reflects their exasperation at an unconscionable situation.

A fresh swell of extortion and violence in the air and at airports has exposed the inadequacy of the response made by airlines, governments and the international community to a wave of aerial banditry that has been building for several years. Confronted with an ever-present danger to their passengers and planes, the men who command airliners, like the captains of ships, understandably feel they have not only the duty but the right to demand more effective security standards.

There are at least three ways in which the UN Security Council could move to help deter hijacking and associated crimes:

- Call on all nations speedily to ratify existing conventions dealing with these problems. Of 124 member states in the International Civil Aviation Organization, only eight have signed and only 27 so far have ratified the Hague convention of 1970 calling for "severe" penalties and for the extradition of hijackers. Only 39 have signed and only two tiny ones have ratified last year's Montreal convention broadening that pact.

- Initiate urgent steps for sanctions against any nation that fails to comply with those conventions, as recommended by the United States and Canada last year. Secretary of State Rogers's determination to press this issue is encouraging.

- Convene an emergency meeting of ICAO to complete a new convention, already in preparation, spelling out measures to be taken at all airports to intercept potential hijackers, arms and explosives.

The pilots and their passengers are entitled to immediate action in all these neglected areas, especially the imposition of tough international sanctions against those nations failing to comply with minimum security requirements. If the airways cannot be made more reasonably safe, the pilots have no alternative but to refuse to fly.

In the meantime, West Germany and Algeria could set an example for the world if they would voluntarily extradite—or at least severely punish—hijackers now in their custody as a result of recent incidents. Algeria's newly expressed willingness to end its haven for hijackers is a welcome—if belated—step in the right direction.

Common Market Wrangles

A stage for the latest round was provided by the Western European Union assembly to the meetings of which France has returned now that wrangles about Britain's entry have ended.

On market matters Mr. Pompidou's threat to cancel the summit of the Ten, to which he was to have been host in October, was duly followed by a warning by the French delegate, Mr. Lipkowski, that the Community was not "irreversible."

But the other six refused to be frightened. As a result, a useful and forthright exchange of views developed, from which it emerged that, although there were different opinions about the rate of advance towards unity, even the most pragmatic wanted a bigger element of idealism than France was prepared to accept, and above all that there must be no ganging up against America.

Wisely the risks of forcing things & outrance were avoided. The point had been reached where matters had to be left to the ministerial council. Accordingly no vote was taken on whether the proposed political secretariat should be an effective instrument linked to the market commission in Brussels, or a modest affair in Paris, which France alone wants and to which she has become deeply committed.

The Russians Aren't Coming

The Russians aren't coming—and thinking people will be glad they're not. As an open port we have to allow Russian liners our facilities. And as one of the world's big ship-repair centers, we cannot turn back business when Russian ships come here for costly refits. But we mustn't let the Russians turn Hong Kong into a spy center on China. Our position is too delicate to run any risks like that.

There's no doubt that the ulterior motive of the Russian whaling fleet [which has announced it is not going to Hong Kong] near our waters was to do some energetic spying here. It might make a good plot for a Hollywood movie but in real life things are going too smoothly for Hong Kong now for us to risk offending China.

LONDON—"Of course I'm dying," said the veteran American humorist Mark Twain yesterday, grimly smiling. "We're all dying. But I don't know that I'm doing it any faster than anybody else. As for dying in poverty, I'd just as soon die in poverty in London as anywhere. It would be a little more difficult, that's all; because I have got quite a number of friends here, anyone of whom, I believe, would be good for a month's provisions, and that would drag out the agony a long time."

PHILADELPHIA—The wrecking steamer Blakely sailed for New York today en route to the spot where the Cunard liner Lusitania lies, where an effort will be made to save the treasure which the liner carried in her strongroom when she was torpedoed during the war. The vessel expects to arrive at the scene of operations on June 20, and it is expected by Mr. B.F. Leavitt, inventor of deep-sea diving suits, that three weeks will be sufficient to cut out and to raise the treasure.

Poland and Détente With West

By Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

WARSAW—Sweeping economic changes being made here by party leader Edward Giersek, a pragmatic Communist who used to toll in the coal mines of France, provide an essential backdrop for understanding the irresistible move toward détente with the West.

Relentless pressure from Poland and the Soviet Union's entire Eastern European empire is now focused on Moscow, reinforcing the Kremlin's own decision to move toward a new form of "partnership" with the United States. That pressure is rooted in one hard fact: Political stability in Central Europe and between Moscow and Washington must be established before serious economic improvements can be made.

Giersek came to power as the result of a threatened civil war in December of 1970 over price hikes on meat and other consumer goods in drastic short supply. He is now convinced that higher standards of living are the critical margin of safety for avoiding a new round of economic civil war with ominous political overtones.

And workers more take-home pay. But the promised increase in wages will be a new source of political danger unless there are consumer goods to buy. State banks now hold about $4 billion in savings—Polish money looking for cars, refrigerators, apartments, tape recorders and other items taken for granted in the West.

Stealing a leaf from the Kremlin, Giersek is promoting joint-venture deals with Western industrial giants such as Fiat, whose new Polish plant will produce 500,000 cars a year. Poland supplies labor, some materials and a guaranteed Polish market; Fiat supplies management, licenses and production technology.

Giersek's long-range plan: to wed Western technology and production to Eastern labor and consumption. To work with the United States, he needs long-range credit from the Export-Import Bank, a matter discussed but not resolved during Mr. Nixon's visit here last week.

The political dangers of this unprecedented opening to the West are obvious. More than one million Poles have crossed into comparatively prosperous East Germany since the border was opened in January, but that's only a starter. With a slight easing of Polish tourism to the capitalist West, the Poles are clamoring to go. What they see will act as an electrifying catalyst for more consumer demands in their own country.

Accordingly, even if Giersek's soaring economic blueprint can be made to work by the cumbersome middle-level party bureaucracy, expectations will probably far outrun performance. That could well mean political and ideological unrest, fed by the Washington-Moscow détente.

That's why Western experts here predict an immediate ideological tightening to stamp out political ferment and warn the intellectual dissidents. The paradox is obvious: Genuinely dedicated to improved standards of living and interlocking relationships with the capitalist West, Giersek and his fellow East Europeans may start a backfire they cannot contain.

The Cost of Phuc Loc

By Anthony Lewis

LONDON—Several weeks ago in this space there was a report from the North Vietnamese village of Phuc Loc. It described the damage done when, as the villagers and North Vietnamese officials said, American planes bombed Phuc Loc at 2:30 on the morning of April 15. They said that of the population of 611, 63 were killed and 61 injured.

The Defense Department in Washington was asked to comment, to say how such a non-military place could have been bombed. Phuc Loc is a village of mud huts, a small island in a sea of rice fields, about five miles south of Haiphong.

The Pentagon reply, received in due course, was a flat denial that American bombers had attacked Phuc Loc. A B-52 raid on Haiphong April 16 had been announced shortly after it took place, an official said. But it was against Pentagon policy to bomb populated areas, he said, and there had been no raid on Phuc Loc.

A Mirage

There is an almost Alice-in-Wonderland logic to that Pentagon comment: We do not bomb civilian targets, so we could not have bombed Phuc Loc. In its blandness it really suggests that there was no bombing, that the whole affair was made up or a mirage.

The difficulty is that anyone who actually saw Phuc Loc after April 16 will believe otherwise.

It would be extremely difficult to take the bomb craters that I saw there with my own eyes. It would be a remarkable piece of theater to stage the screaming women in the rubble, and the people who spoke of their families being killed. And others have seen Phuc Loc.

Damage to Humanity

It would be one thing for a Pentagon official to say that no such civilian village is an American bombing target, but that a mistake could not be altogether excluded that close to Haiphong. It is another to imply that there was no bombing of Phuc Loc at all—especially when U.S. intelligence photographs could well have shown the damage.

The Pentagon comment thus unintentionally illuminates one grave cost of this war to Americans: The damage to our candor and humanity.

It is not only Phuc Loc, of course. A number of Western correspondents over many years have reported on bomb damage to civilian facilities in North Vietnam, to schools and hospitals. But American official policy is evidently to ignore all such reports, to brush them aside, to deny that mistakes can have occurred.

The official announcements continue to speak of B-52s raiding gasoline dumps and bridges and electrical plants, and of ships offshore shelling "Communist military targets." It is as if there were no human

Bernard Levin

From London:

We discovered that the citizen was ludicrously, dangerously and inexorably unprotected; that such existing laws were hopelessly inadequate and largely unenforced

LONDON—The other day, at London's Battersea Park Fun Fair (our nearest equivalent—and not very near, at that—to a cross between Disneyland and the old Coney Island) something went wrong with the Big Dipper. One of the roller-coaster carriages came off the track and hurtled to the ground. Four children were killed and several more injured. An inquiry was immediately instituted. So far, there has been no official announcement as to the cause of the accident, but there has been an announcement that the law relating to fairgrounds and amusement parks is to be reviewed and, if it is found defective, amended. I know no more than anybody else about what caused the Battersea Big Dipper to go wrong, but I am, as it happens, in a position to anticipate the findings of those charged with examining the law on the subject, and could save them the trouble. The law on fairgrounds is not so much defective as nonexistent, and when the Home Office experts have come to that conclusion, I may well ask them why, if I knew this (as I did) 15 months ago, it took the deaths of four children to start them finding it out.

'More Red Tape'

I came to my conclusion in the course of preparing and presenting a television documentary for ATV (one of the principal commercial networks in Britain) under the paradoxical—but, as things turned out, severely understated—title of "What We Need Is More Red Tape."

For the program, we investigated such things as safety regulations in public sports areas; rules governing purity of food offered, and the cleanliness of rest and bars; fire laws; a prevention in factories of places of work; restriction on misleading labeling; car repair and similar matters e.g., automobiles; and it dealt, incidentally, with the run fairgrounds.

In every single case, and in several instances, we discovered that citizens were ludicrously, only and incurably unprotected; that such laws as exist hopelessly inadequate and unenforced; that government reluctance to act in protection of the people was made up of public indifference and skilful lobbying of those profits would be trimmed strong laws against danger and deception; and that it take disaster on a mass scale to produce any improvement in the situation.

In that last conclusion, to say, we were wrong, at the moment the program being screened, there was a disaster at one of the largest football grounds in the country; over 60 people a pile-up at the exits as the crowd that was leaving back on hearing that the game was a dramatic reversal of the last minutes game, and tangled with trying to get out. Shortly the program went out, the a five-disaster at a London (there have been several since) with massive loss. And now there has been Battersea tragedy. Yet the governing the size and safety of crowds in football grounds is virtually nonexistent; fire-safety still have virtually no national enforced powers of inspection control; a motorist still lack real redress against a garage fails to repair his car properly and the showmen's guild body representing these fairgrounds still successfully hists legislation for regular pulvisory testing of their equipment to national standards.

A single example must suffice: it is an entirely typical one worse can be found in many fields. Of factories in England employing more than 50 (and that covers practically whole of British industry) quarters have nobody at all job is, or includes, any inspection of the place from the point of view of safety.

I am not just saying that factories have no full-time professional safety officers; saying that they do not whatever to examine the premises against the risk of accident injuries they do not even say, an employee whose task at the end of his day's work glance round to see if every is in order. And this—three-quarters of factories a work force of more than 100 is an official one, taken the report of the government factory inspectorate. And is no legal power to compel improvement.

Tuned Out

But many Americans, probably most, have simply tuned out. The continuing death and destruction in Vietnam is no longer in their consciousness.

That is why public opinion can be so inert when Seymour M. Hersh of The New York Times discloses secret findings that another massacre occurred on the same morning as My Lai in 1968. The official report speaks of "murder," and of "pretense" and "misrepresentation" in covering it up, but hardly anyone in Washington—in the military, in Congress or in the press—really seems to care deeply.

In a way, concealing the truth or not caring is worse than killing women and children at My Lai or bombing them by mistake at Phuc Loc. Nor does it help to say that the Communists have killed countless innocent people in Vietnam. Americans have to worry about their own souls.

Lamentable State

It is no exaggeration to say that over the whole field safety, accident-prevention, risk, consumer protection and like, Britain's laws are in a lamentable and inadequate state, the gun laws in Arizona some equally underdeveloped of the United States. And worst American gun laws, all, stand out as such a precisely because of the cost they present to so much of American protective legislation. (A York fire-officer would go for mad on the spot if he a close look at the situation his field that exists in Britain. Americans may think that activities of Ralph Nader shown that they are badly unprotected; I can only say by comparison, Americans armor-plated compared with ours. There is much to be for rugged individualism and hardy pioneer spirit. But that much, surely?

Letters

Irony

Sen. McGovern, if elected President in November, would lower the defenses of the United States and further the spread of world Communism, according to Nixon and most conservatives.

Ironically Nixon was invited to Peking and Moscow by the Communist powers, because they are praying for his re-election in November. They know full well that representing the privileged few he is the best man to keep the country under social unrest.

Negotiating an end to the Vietnam war and using some of the defense money to heal the wounds of poverty at home, McGovern would unite the country and win the sympathy of the people abroad, including the Chinese and Russian masses.

This is precisely what Peking and Moscow do not want, they would much rather deal with Nixon's divided America, bristling with bombers and guns.

JEAN DAVIDSON, Saché, France.

Flight From Whom?

The kind of "incident" as happened at Trang Bang (JHT, June 8), clearly shows why so many people in Vietnam choose to flee south when their hometown is overwhelmingly threatened by North Vietnamese or Viet Cong troops. What they fear most in case the latter take over is massive sufferings and deaths brought over by government and American bombings carried out in retaliation.

In 1954, many of the people who fled North Vietnam sought a more comfortable life than that impoverished part of their country was ever able to offer them or their ancestors; others feared with some reason reprisals on the part of the Viet Minh or simply didn't want Communism. Nowadays, what a large majority of Vietnamese are after is bare survival through a scant measure of safety; they don't mind hardship or care about a theoretical freedom they know little about.

NGUYEN XUAN CHANH, Clermont-Ferrand, France.

As usual it seems that children and civilians, or civilians at heart, whether or not they are in uniform, are the victims of mankind's folly. This can be plainly seen in the pitiful photograph of children running crying and screaming from napalm dropped "by mistake" (JHT, June 8).

One of the biggest mistakes man ever made was the idea of dominating others, regardless of the number of victims. It is a shame that people cannot learn to live with one another regardless of differences. Too long have people thrown the blame upon one group or another. It is time that man learn to live with his neighbors, relatives and friends, as well as his so-called enemies, instead of trying always to destroy in the name of democracy, civilization, or whatever!

MICHAEL E. SLOBODKIN, Paris.

I wonder when the political fashion designers are going to take up the cause of the people of Bangladesh? I mean this time the Bihari people who, according to a friend of mine just returned from there, are now being systematically destroyed by that wonderful new Bengal state hailed by one or two of your columnists recently.

Irish offers you the largest and most profitable market in Europe.

Industrialists setting up in the Republic of Ireland get full exemption from taxes on export profits for 15 years. In the EEC, Ireland's tax incentives will remain the best in Europe, with duty-free entry to a market of 260 million (60 million of them right next door).

And all these other benefits:
Workers. Excellent production workers immediately available, intelligent, keen and easy to train.

Grants for sites, buildings and new plant, for training workers, for research and development.
Factory Buildings. Modern factories with full facilities are available at favourable rents.
Transportation. Excellent uncrowded highways. Container service to British and Continental ports. Immediate access by air to world markets.

For complete information on all aspects of setting up industry in Ireland call Niall Mooney at Paris 256 00-49 or John O'Sullivan at Cologne (021) 37 31 00 or Eoin O'Sullivan at London 01-629 4214.

BRIDGE By Alan Truscott

This hand, recently played in a private game, caused considerable discomfiture to an expert player, sitting in the South position.

North's artificial opening bid showed 16 points or more and South's one no-trump response was balanced and positive. North could simply have raised to three no-trump but he used Stayman not to locate a major suit fit but to guard against a possible weakness. When South bid two spades, the no-trump game became the obvious contract.

Given this bidding, the only genuine suit was spades. Nevertheless, West led the five of spades. On the face of it, this gave South a trick. But, luckily for West, South was an expert. When East produced the queen, South made the intelligent but unfortunate play of ducking, assuming that West would not have led a four-card suit in face of the spade bid. The distribution seemed to him to be 5-2.

As South expected, East returned the spade seven and West won with the nine. A heart shift was safe and the dummy's ace was taken. South now tried diamonds, and, as West held length in spades, the declarer misguessed by leading to the diamond 10. West won and led a second heart.

South took it with the heart queen, cashed two diamond winners, ending in his hand, and took a club finesse. But he nearly fell off his chair when East won with the king and produced the spade three.

So, instead of preventing the defense from making four spade tricks, the first-trick duck had allowed them to do so.

THE NEEDLE'S EYE

By Margaret Drabble. Alfred A. Knopf. 369 pp. $6.95.

Reviewed by Geoffrey Wolff

STRAIT is the gate, and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and there be few that find it." A couple of novels back, in "Jerusalem the Golden," Margaret Drabble, or her character Clara, drolly mistook St. Matthew's stratagem straight. But this time round, in a parable of structures and confinements and moral imperatives, the young British novelist gets the words, and their intimidating instruction, just right. With precision, and intelligent care—and in the face of every fashion—Miss Drabble manages to dramatize such concepts as Duty, Good Works, Faith, and Brotherhood. Her theme is modern London, rather than the ether yonder, and her characters are life-size. She is more at home with social nuance than with theological commandments. Nevertheless, her works abound with references to John Bunyan and his Christian allegories.

"The Needle's Eye" tells the story of an unhappily married lawyer, Simon Camish, and a young divorced mother, Rose Vassilon. Simon is the more conventional of the two, a burnt-out case who values himself too low, who refuses to blink the penny ante tyrants who oppress him. He is thought to have married for money, though he did not. "At least such an assumption concealed the truth." He would, at that age, have preferred to appear as cynic than fool. He has surrendered to misanthropy "as a drunken man plunges suddenly into an awareness of being drunk," and he is most exquisitely tortured by the company of his peers.

Miss Drabble is attentive, and not without malice. She is especially deft at trapping us somewhere beneath the third circle of a disastrous dinner party. She takes us shopping for the food and drink, serves us the quick, describes the smart, rick that defaces dining and drawing rooms. We suffer with Simon. At one such party, he meets Rose, and she shows him a secret passage out of the prison of social conventions.

She is rich, rich enough to have read about her eccentricities on the front pages of the tabloids. Her eccentricities have been two: She has married beneath herself, and she has given her fortune to the poor. She lives in an unfashionable quarter of London, and sends her children to an unfashionable state school. She enjoys poverty. Her ambition for vulgar normality sets her apart, of course. Her estranged husband threatens to reclaim custody of their children by arguing in court that her way of life is insane. Simon begins his association with Rose by giving her legal advice, but soon he is drawn to the storm-center of her moral dilemma: What is the nature, giving? Who gets? Who pays? Rose's husband addresses the question with the kind of big rational fervor that a Gracie Greene character might exhibit. "You've no idea," said Christ, how absolutely wicked a selfish people are when they hold of this idea of being as they destroy everything as they. They end up in a hard desert." Rose, though, is self-righteous, not sanctimonious. "She knew wherein her defects lay... And those defects being her virtues, her faith, way of life, she could not go without losing all, after even promise of reform." And, single-minded, she presses ward her quest for common cencies, she trusts on her to love other people, and to them what she owns. By now end she is warily reunited to her husband, and Simon is nearly where he began.

That Miss Drabble manages pick her way through this without straining is a credit, her formidable intelligence, to her seriousness. Her characters most often think their she through. Little is said, less happens, promised climaxes go by, ing off like smoke from a smoldering fire, people are pushed stage, win us over and then, children at bedtime, are slumped dismissed.

For all this, a Drabble is never memorable. It is always good. Her shifts of tense in point of view are peculiarly graceful. Her ventures are resting, and her architectural designs are sound. But fundamentally, Miss Drabble's ever violates our cherished assumptions and clichés. A square neighborhood, under her scrutiny comes to subtle, even noble. In A pompous jerk of a headmaster is revealed to be a man of great charity and understanding—will always rhetoric.

Miss Drabble has been at the game of transforming our apprehensions for some time. Like us she knows that things are solid, what they seem. Unlike us, she believes things are frequent better than they seem. For a brilliant heroine of an old novel, "The Millstone," an unwanted and illegitimate daughter brings salvation. She—like Drabble—finds a way through the chartered barren places by a simple assumption of responsibility. With Rose's forces, us to inquire whether it really true that the examined must necessarily be as frost tough, and self-absorbed as we have made it.

Geoffrey Wolff is the author of a novel, "Bad Deeds," and a former book editor of Newsweek and of The Washington Post. © The Washington Post.

major this season to lose 10 games. He has won two.

Padres 4, Cardinals 3
San Diego was on the verge of its 11th straight loss, trailing St. Louis, 3-2, in the eighth, but rallied to win at home in 10 innings. 4-3. San Diego picked up one unearned run in the eighth, then sent the game into extra innings on homers by Nate Colbert and Larry Stahl. In the 10th, a single by Gary Janssen, a sacrifice, an infield error and Darrel Thomas's run-producing single, his third hit of the game, won it.

Orleans 3, Rangers 1
In the American League, Tom Shroyer scored the winning run on a wild pitch and Dave Johnson doubled home another as Baltimore struck for two runs in the ninth inning to whip Texas in a pitching duel between winner Jim Palmer and Dick Bosman at Arlington, Texas. Shroyer, running for Brooks Robinson, who had opened the rally with a single, moved to third on a single by Johnny Oates, and scored on a wild pitch by Horacio Pina.

White Sox 6, 5, Brewers 4, 4
Chicago moved to within 1 1/2 games of Oakland, the Western Division leader, by sweeping a home doubleheader, 6-4 and 5-4, from Milwaukee. In the opener, the White Sox hit five home runs—three in one game since June 24, 1969, at Seattle—including Dick Allen's 10th and 11th. In the second game, they overcame a 4-0 deficit, capped by Carlos May's run-producing single in the ninth.

Gonzales Defeats Foe Half His Age In English Tennis

BECKENHAM, England, June 12 (Reuters)—Pancho Gonzalez of Los Angeles beat Japan's Ken Hirai in the first round of the Green Shield Kent lawn tennis championship here.

The top-seeded 44-year-old beat the 22-year-old Tokyo student, 7-5, 9-7.

Gonzales said later: "I expect all my matches to be long and hard now, but I can do with the practice. I have only played four tournaments this year."

He said about his prospects at Wimbledon in two weeks time, "I'll see me, they're mad. They're mad to send me No. 1 here this week, an old man like me," he said.

Ill Trevino Hopes To Defend Title

EL PASO, Texas, June 12 (UPI)—Lee Trevino, the U.S. Open champion, heartened by chest X-ray reports on his illness, ordered a putting rug brought to his hospital room yesterday so he could practice before going to Pebble Beach, Calif., to defend his title Thursday.

"I'm feeling better today, but I'll have to take it easy," he said 36 hours after he was hospitalized with acute bronchitis and the early stages of pneumonia.

"If I keep improving, I'll be able to play," he said. "I'm not going to have any strength and power. The only thing I can call on is my putter. They are bringing me a rug so I can practice in my room."

Isaksson Outvaults
HELMINGSBORG, Sweden, June 12 (UPI)—Kjell Isaksson, Sweden's world pole vault record-holder, beat the East German and European champion Wolfgang Nordwig in an international meet here.

Isaksson vaulted 5.55 meters (18 feet 2 1/2 inches) and the German vaulted 5.40 meters. The record is 18-4 1/4.

HEFTY HEAVE—Ruth Fuchs of East Germany breaks the women's world record for the javelin Sunday with a throw of 55.66 meters (213 feet 5 1/2 inches) in a meet at Potsdam, East Germany. Earlier in the day, at Bucharest, Ewa Gryzelska of Poland had eclipsed the world mark of 62.40 with a throw of 62.70, a short-lived record.

White Sox Ex-Hurler Wants To Make Pitches, Not War

By Murray Chass

NEW YORK, June 12 (UPI)—"Watch the Fighting White Sox in 1972," suggests the slogan on Chicago's pocket baseball schedule. And indeed, accompanying the slogan is a picture of a Chicago player fighting.

The player is Bart Johnson, and in the pictures he's snarling at several Oakland Athletics who are trying to get at him. The fight, which occurred last season, is one of the reasons Bart Johnson no longer is a member of the Fighting White Sox whom the fans should go and see.

Johnson plays for Tucson of the Pacific Coast League now, but he was drafted by the Yankees and demoted after he hit runs in the 13th inning a week ago.

It wasn't that inning that prompted the White Sox to exile Johnson to the minors; the young right-hander had been hit hard all season, and the White Sox sent him to Tucson so he could rediscover his fastball, one of the liveliest in the league last year.

Image Making
It's questionable whether Johnson wants to rediscover the fastball. There's no doubt, though, that the White Sox had to do something with him after what they did to him with their image-making campaign.

"The best thing that could happen to him was to remove him from this situation," said Rick Reichardt, Johnson's perceptive teammate.

Johnson, it turns out, was very sensitive to his involvement in several fights or near fights last season. He was with the fight with the Athletics, the alterations all were started by a Johnson fastball hitting a batter or missing him by the thickness of a stitch on a ball.

"His fear of hitting someone again and starting a fight was the basis of his ineffectiveness," Reichardt said. "His just wanted to throw as hard as he could. A player's psyche, which most people aren't concerned with, affects his play on the field."

"They made a big thing out of his fights. For instance, on our press caravan during the winter they had a large collage depicting the Oakland fight."

LE MANS, June 12 (UPI)—It was just a headspace announcement for most, as the death of Joachim Bonnier of Sweden yesterday was not a real part of the spectacle of the 24 Hours of Le Mans auto race. The accident happened on a stretch of track with no amusement park, no loud bands, no lines of tents, and thus no one in the crowd really knew what had really happened to "poor Jo Bonnier." The 300,000 spectators—or however many there were at 8:15 in the morning—were still recovering from the night before, or out mending their ways, or at least that is what Le Mans is all about.

Le Mans is also an auto race, also somewhat surreal, for enduring cars especially prepared for Le Mans, the last of the 24-hour specials. It is the most prestigious race for commercial-type cars, or prototypes—you won't see any Alfa-Romeos such as yesterday's winner on the roads of France, and a rare on which the winning car, and the manufacturers of all parts which make up the car, base their entire year's advertising campaign.

That's Entertainment
The 24 Hours of Le Mans is an excuse for a party. The spectators stand up to watch the race at the start, and again about 21 or 22 hours later for the finish, and then sit on the grass, surrounded by the funny machines. After all, how long can you sit and watch the machines go around and around?

There is other entertainment. On the infield surrounding the 8.42-mile course there is a nine-hole golf course, a mass of pavilions serving food and drink, and a large area where people sell their wares, from German sausages to rows of tents, and old ladies selling sleeping bags.

Infidel Chatter
On the other side of the infield, a carnival with the one-and-only two-headed woman, a roller coaster and the Vampires, and a large area where people sell their wares, from German sausages to rows of tents, and old ladies selling sleeping bags.

Johnson pitched, but his fastball was a feeble imitation of the fastball of 1971. At times it didn't even seem as if the 6-foot-5 Californian cared whether he got any one out.

Whether a trip to Tucson turns out to be what the doctor ordered remains to be seen, but if there's anything to be learned from the Johnson affair, the White Sox might know next time to be more concerned about their players than their image.

percent. Of that, 21 percent are students.

When the race ended yesterday, blue-collar workers, students, and the very young flooded over the guardrails near the finish line and tried to edge closer to the victory stand where the winning drivers—Graham Hill of Britain and France's Henri Pescarolo—would drink and spray champagne. But it was several minutes before the drivers appeared and the crowd leaned forward. The police, protecting the stands, leaned forward. The heroes soon appeared and everyone was happy, and that was the end of a long 24 hours. Soon the Le Mans course was naked.

The pit crew of a Lola T-280, though, had left the track several hours before, when word came back that Mr. Bonnier, 42, had died when he tried to drive his Lola through an opening which wasn't there. His machine hit the rear of the Ferrari GTB.

Mrs. Tweedy Wins a Wager In the Eighth Race at Belmont

By Gerald Strine

ELMONT, N.Y., June 12 (UPI)—Lucien Laurin and Elliott Burch warmed up for the Belmont Stakes by sending out the winners of a $90.60 daily double. It was an appetizer for their direct and much more important battle in the 126th Kentucky Derby when Riva Ridge won.

Lucien Laurin, trained by Laurin, won the opening dash. Burch countered in the second race with Age of Gold. When Laurin came back to take the fifth with Spanish Fiddle, he would have thought his constituents had gathered plenty of seed money for the feature.

Perhaps so, but Helen Tweedy hadn't. "I've not cashed a ticket all day," said Mrs. Tweedy, the owner of the Meadow Stable and Belmont.

"Makes a guy wonder whether she's lost confidence in her trainer, doesn't it?" a visiting turf writer wondered aloud.

It was an unfair comment. Sovereign, which paid $3.80 for $2 to win, is owned by Reginald Webster. Spanish Fiddle, $6.40, carries Roy Anderson's colors. Laurin does not restrict his training to Riva Ridge and the Meadow Stable. He tries to make money for all his owners and, this season, he has been smashingly successful in that pursuit.

Just why Mrs. Tweedy hadn't made a dollar or two on Spanish Fiddle was puzzling because Quill Gordon, which she owns, ran in the mile race and cost her the winner as the Laurin-trained entry.

But she bet $50 to win on "Riva" in the eighth race and left instructions, plus $45, with a friend to "wheel" Riva Ridge with each of the nine rivals in the exacta.

Someone had to explain to her friend what a "wheel" was. Eventually the man was pointed in the right direction and secured $5 worth of one-two selections on every combination—Riva Ridge
